ATTENTION GWAR INSTRUCTORS!

If you have multilingual students in your GWAR class who need writing and grammar support, the Composition for Multilingual Students (CMS) Program has several options to offer.

English 215: Equivalent to English 214, English 215 offers multilingual students instruction and practice in basic essay writing and research skills. Recommended for ML students in lieu of English 214, or as a review course for those who have completed this requirement, but could use more practice in fundamental writing skills. Students may take this course in preparation for their GWAR, or other upper-division writing-intensive courses.

English 410: An upper-division writing course designed for multilingual writers in any major with an emphasis on research and citation, as well as writing for a specific audience. Students may take this course as a preparation for their GWAR or other upper-division writing-intensive courses. Check class schedule for availability.

English 415: An upper-division grammar and editing course designed to be taken with writing-intensive courses, especially GWAR. The course offers instruction and practice in editing for accuracy and style, as well as correct use of citations. Students will also learn to understand and fulfill the requirements of diverse writing tasks.

We encourage you to recommend these courses to your multilingual students who would benefit from writing and language preparation before or during their GWAR course. Students who wish to take one or more of these classes should come by or email the CMS Office in HUM 112. cmls@sfsu.edu.

With your recommendation, GWAR students will be able to add a CMS class without taking the CMS Placement Test.
